Everything is Blak & White I'm Afraid! Mariaa Randall

Everything is Blak & White I'm Afraid! looks at the words from the past that have been spoken by Aboriginal peoples for centuries and fall on silent ears. I have looked through print media of stories relating to protest/s and why it is that Aboriginal peoples continue to stand up, shout out and gather to walk together. It is in protest of injustices to our peoples.

You could read something 80 years ago that is still a fight in present day Australia. Where is the difference? Where is the change? And why is the responsibility of that change always placed on the shoulders, in the hands of Aboriginal peoples when the second standard of injustice is handed out by white hands?
